For Immediate Release

Consortium II Now Has Podcasting Capabilities

Richardson, Texas - February 8, 2007 - Consortium II Now Has Podcasting Capabilities

Forum Communications International today introduced Podcasting capabilities to the Consortium product line, showcasing a mixture of high tech, advanced features with redesigned hardware and software. The user has easy one touch access and can download conferences as Podcasts, allowing users to listen to conferences at their leisure. The product line consisting of Consortium II and Consortium VIP enable users to capture their calls in a Podcast for automatic download via their choice of software such as iTunes from Apple.

Podcasting gives the end user easier access to recorded calls without the hassle of trying to download the file. Everything is automatic just setup your iTunes software to point to the link and you can automatically capture all of the calls of the President, CFO or HR department. Never miss that important meeting, you can catch up on it while in your car, while working out, or traveling no need to hunt someone down and ask "What did they say in the meeting" your there without having to attend.

Forum's Consortium product line is taking conferencing to the next level and enabling the systems to be easy to manage, control and now to access the calls at a later time. Previous Conferencing systems made the user's either call in and listen via the phone or have to navigate through multiple windows to get to a place they might be able to download the file. Consortium II includes software that is accessible from any web browser. It has the integrated Outlook scheduler that lets anyone schedule a conference. Forum wants the meeting to be a face-to-face experience for the end user.

Consortium's affordability will save businesses time and money. C level officers and managers can now conveniently conference from their office. If you frequently travel for meetings, you can use Forum's products to save time and money.
